Hi Great Spotted Kiwi Supporters.

A story I would like to share with you...

Emma, Patrick and I went up the Lake to remove Puremahia's transmitter on Thursday morning (21.6.18). Puremahia is one of three adult Great Spotted Kiwi in the Park that carry transmitters.

Opposite Whiskey Falls, we picked up his transmitter signal, on the St Arnaud Range side, which is known as the Rotoiti Nature Recovery Area. From the boat, we plotted Puremahia's position by triangulation.

Once ashore, as we walked up hill, Emma and Patrick listened to the transmitter signal to find Puremahia's exact location. We found his burrow under a dead beech tree. Very quietly Patrick and Emma surveyed the area for the entrance to the burrow, which Emma found. Emma had to crawl into the burrow up to her waist.

This is when the excitement started. Emma pulled out a kiwi and it was a female bird, who didn't think this was fun. She was a bit feisty. As Emma held her, Patrick went back to the burrow and found another kiwi, a young female, which I held. Patrick went back to the burrow again and finally pulled out Puremahia. We had to place him in a catch bag, as we were running out of hands. Patrick then weighed them, measured their beaks and checked their condition. When he had finished, he went back to the burrow and found a kiwi chick. It was Puremahia's chick, which had hatched in November or December last year. Patrick was able to take photos of the chick before we placed all the kiwi back in the burrow, and we left very quietly.

It was a day I will never forget. We don't really know what is out there in the park. Two Kea flying around above us during our kiwi catch made our day.

I must say Patrick and Emma are very professional in their approach and care of the Kiwi.

Patrick has looked back at the records and found that one of the kiwi, without a transmitter, is a female, named Awaroa, and the other could be an Operation Nest Egg bird named Turimawiwi 2012.

As Patrick put it "Talk about a cosy burrow!"

Nice as pie!

Pies would have to be one of the ultimate winter comfort foods and there were plenty of pie-eating grins to prove it at the Bring Back the Pie competition on Saturday 7 July.

Originally expecting 34 people and 18 pies on the night, the organising team scrambled to squeeze in more than 50 hungry punters, while hard-working judges Jo and Sam Midgley raced to assess and grade an additional 10 entries.

Pip Berkett's bacon and egg pie won the Competitive Savoury section. "An excellent example," enthused the judges, making special mention of the tasty crust.

"Oma's Apple Pie" was overall winner of the Competitive Sweet category, with baker Ingrid McConochie complimented on her pie's pastry, texture and filling.

The event was conceived by Judi Edridge, Marg Anderson and Lorri Taylor at an informal get-together rumoured to have involved "too many wines." Although the idea behind the night was simply to cover costs, the organisers announced they would donate the excess $570 raised towards the local Fire Brigade First Response effort.

Despite a very dramatic-sounding crockery malfunction, an extended wait for the additional entries to be judged, and Your Reporter being instructed by an RDCC stalwart to "bugger off" as she attempted to photograph him in a fetching black singlet, Bring Back the Pie was unanimously pronounced a stunning success.

There's no plan to hold another at this stage but Marg says any future events would probably be competitive-only.

—Niki Morrell

P.S. Photos taken on the night are available to view and download at <https://bit.ly/2NbZkVr> until 7pm on Sunday 5 August.

Judi, Lorri and Marg, would like to thank everyone who supported “Bring Back the Pie” competition on Saturday night, it was such a fun evening with some amazing savoury and sweet pies. Our wonderful judges Jo and Sam Midgely who did a superb job, thank you. After our expenses, we had an excess of $570.00 which has been donated to the Lake Rotoiti First Response team for equipment.

Just to let those who would like to come up for a cuppa at the café at Tophouse we will be closed until September for Bathroom renovations .
